There is no such thing as a "common" cold.

NO two people are alike. And no two colds are alike.

For example, what may be simply a runny nose for you could be a real problem for someone else.

Not only that, you can have a dry, hacking cough with a runny or stuffy nose.

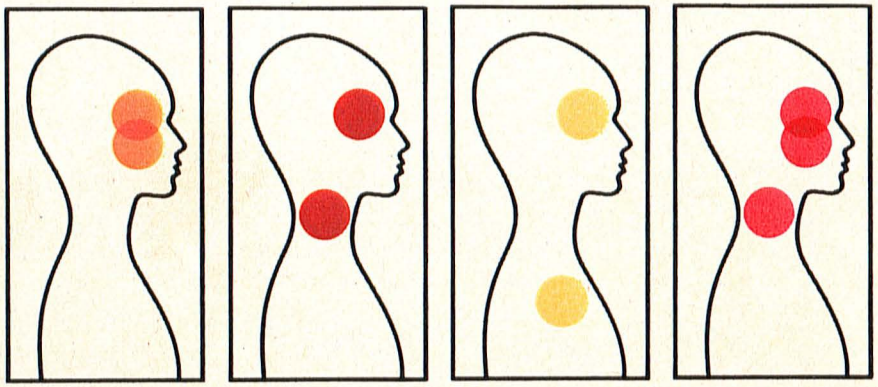
Or a dry, hacking cough without a runny nose.

Or any other number of combinations. So how do you know what to take?

Well, some cold medicine manufacturers think you and your family should take one powerful cold medicine to relieve more symptoms than you may actually have.

We don't.

Because we don't want you to be overmedicated.



Triaminic® Syrup
Triaminic-12® Tablets
Stuffy nose
Runny nose
Postnasal drip

Triaminic-DM®
Cough Formula
Stuffy nose
Frequent cough

Triaminic® Expectorant
Stuffy nose
Dry, hacking cough

Triaminicol® Multi-Symptom Cold Syrup
Nasal congestion
Runny nose
Frequent cough

After all, when all you have is a stuffy, runny nose, why take products with a cough suppressant or fever reducer? And if you're dealing with a cough, why risk possible stomach upset with a product that contains aspirin?

Which is why Triaminic® offers a wide range of cold medicines. For four different stages and combinations of a cold.

THEY all contain a decongestant to quickly clear nasal passages.

Because one thing you expect from cold medicines is to let you breathe freer, fast.

But none of them contain aspirin. Because we feel aspirin or other pain relievers are something you should only take when the symptoms require it.

Each Triaminic formula treats specific symptoms, each in its own unique way.

Triaminic® Cold Syrup is for postnasal drip and the stuffy, runny nose of a cold.

It's also available in a sustained-release tablet. Triaminic-12® Tablets can give you long-lasting relief for up to 12 hours, day or night.

Triaminic-DM® Cough Formula effectively relieves an annoying, persistent cough and nasal congestion.

To break up congestion when you have a dry, hacking cough, we make Triaminic® Expectorant.

And Triaminicol® Multi-Symptom Cold Syrup is designed especially for three specific symptoms: nasal congestion, frequent coughing and runny nose.

And they're all safe and effective, so they've been recommended by physicians and pharmacists for years.

RECOMMENDED

So, the next time you get the so-called "common" cold, try Triaminic.

We won't treat your cold in a common way.

TV GUIDE's special poll reveals strong female reactions to the medium and its influence

By Michael A. Lipton

When women across America were asked by the Opinion Research Corporation in an exclusive survey for TV GUIDE to name the one man on television they most admire, the candidate most frequently nominated was not Alan Alda or Phil Donahue—outspoken feminists both—but CBS's prime-time Prince Charming, Tom Selleck, the sexy bachelor detective hero of Magnum, P.I. And it was Barbara Walters, ABC's doyenne of celebrity interviewers—and a sort of standard-bearer for working women—who, in the same survey, was most often cited as the one woman other women most admire on TV.

The fact that American women in 1983 should hold a feminist role model and a male sex symbol in such mutually high esteem is only one of several paradoxes our pollsters uncovered. The survey, conducted in September and based on telephone interviews with a scientifically selected cross section of 1000 adult American women, also reveals:

☐ That more women than the number who voted for Selleck and Walters say they don't know whom they admire most on TV.

☐ That a majority of women say they watch TV to be entertained—yet another majority complain that the medium doesn't adequately cover such topical issues as rape, equal pay, widowhood and aging.

☐ That so-called "women's shows" are the ones least preferred by most female viewers.

☐ That most believe there's too much sex on pay cable—but would not ban cable operators from showing soft-core pornography.

☐ That working women tend to be more critical of television than do their stay-at-home "sisters"; women who are divorced or separated are more critical than women who aren't; blacks are more critical than whites.

It's risky in any survey to surmise why people give the answers they do. Some of the seeming contradictions contained in this poll may merely reflect a deep and genuine uncertainty over just what role women feel TV should play in their lives. As for the divisions within their ranks—e.g., between women who work and women who don't—such differences may simply mirror larger schisms in the life styles and attitudes of these groups.

Almost half of the women interviewed in our survey (which has a sampling error of plus or minus three percentage points) say they're now watching less TV than they were five years ago and only 21 per cent claim to be viewing more (although Nielsen reports that viewing is at an all-time high). This perceived drop in viewing is especially evident among wealthier and better-educated women, as well as singles, women who are divorced or separated, and the majority of those holding jobs outside the home. Yet despite women's insistence that they are viewing less, TV is still cited—by a wide margin over newspapers, radio and magazines—as the source most relied upon for keeping up with the news. It's not surprising, then, that news and information shows are the most popular kind on the air (particularly among the 50-and-older crowd).

But ask women why they watch TV and the majority tell you it's to seek entertainment, which they seem to find plenty of in the form of movies, comedies and → soaps (the three most popular categories after news). The least popular shows, though, are programs designed specifically for women. In case you were wondering what sorts of shows fall into that group, so were we, and so we had our pollsters ask those women who most preferred women's programming to give three examples. The only one cited with any frequency: Donahue. Perhaps the term "women's shows" is an anachronism. Women will watch whatever they want and not necessarily what's targeted for them by programmers.

When it comes to what their children watch, women are the programmers. Indeed, nearly 70 per cent of mothers who live with children under 12 say that, in their homes, it's the adults who determine which shows kids tune in—and when it's time to turn them off. At least half of the time, women are watching with their children. It's interesting to note that in cable-TV households, where the viewing level has increased more than it has in non-cable households and where you'll find more children under 12 than in homes not serviced by cable, mothers tend to be slightly more selective about choosing what their children may watch. Their caution notwithstanding, the majority of these women say they are generally satisfied with the kinds of shows available for kids. The same cannot be said of women without cable, only 38 per cent of whom say they are happy with what TV offers their children.

Women are more unanimous in their criticism of network TV for not having enough of the kinds of shows they say they like—but they are split roughly 50-50 over whether there's too much sports on the networks. The networks are more criticized for their programming in general than are pay-cable channels. But both come under fire for showing, in the view of most women, too much sex and violence.

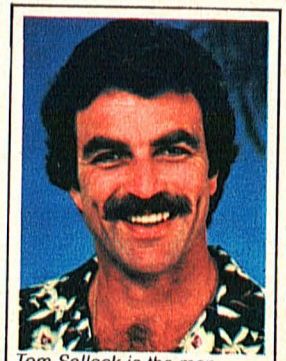
Still, opposed as they are to TV's apparent sexual permissiveness, the majority of women in our survey showed themselves to be remarkably permissive in response to the question of whether pay-cable channels that show soft-core porn should be banned. Six out of 10 said that such channels ought to be allowed and that the decision to tune in or not be left up to the individual subscriber.

Henry Wolf

TV's handling of sex-related issues is something else entirely—and it's something that a significant number of women in our survey feel has, in at least several respects, been less than satisfactory. Almost half, for instance, say that television has not devoted enough time to the subject of birth control. Half or more assert there hasn't been sufficient coverage of rape. Further, when rape and teen-age pregnancy are dealt with, women, on balance, say they are handled too timidly. At the other extreme, about a third of all women say that TV has been too sensational in its handling of prostitution. Concerning abortion, however, women are almost evenly divided over whether its treatment on TV is sensational, timid or balanced.

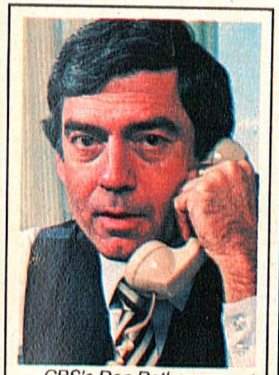
TV's most admired woman: Barbara Walters.

Women were also asked to assess how much—and how fairly—they feel TV news and entertainment programs cover sexual harassment, job discrimination, ERA, nuclear and environmental control, working mothers, second marriages, infidelity—in all, 21 issues we judged to be of particular (though by no means exclusive) concern to women these days. For most, women say TV has not devoted enough time. But, with the exception of sexual harassment (which more than a third feel has been treated too timidly), women say TV has been pretty balanced in its treatment of these issues. (The chart on page 12 lists only the ones that drew the greatest response. The others, besides those mentioned above, were teen-age pregnancy, birth control, unwed mothers, abortion, pornography and prostitution.)



Tom Selleck is the man most admired on TV.

Robert Phillips



CBS's Dan Rather scored highest in appeal.

Henry Grossman

In some cases, the groups you'd think would be the most critical, based on their firsthand knowledge of a given issue, responded quite the contrary. TV provides a balanced view of divorce (say most divorcées), widowhood (say most widows) and growing old (say most retirees). But not every constituency is so easily satisfied. Here are three of the most outspoken:

☐ Black women, more than any other demographic group, fault TV for the dearth of coverage they feel it gives issues of concern to them: 14 of the 21 on our list are not afforded enough time on the air, say a majority of blacks. The issue they feel has been most neglected is equal pay (82 per cent say that TV could do more on this subject), followed by growing old (76 per cent), widowhood (73 per cent) and job discrimination (71 per cent). Only in regard to widowhood and growing old do a majority of white women say TV coverage has been insufficient.

☐ Working women are also concerned about what TV doesn't show enough of. What's troubling them most on the job? Not sexual harassment or job discrimination, curiously enough (although half would like to see more coverage of both), but the problems of growing old (66 per cent). That's followed closely by widowhood and equal pay.

☐ Divorced and separated women are the most critical of the marital groups in our survey when it comes to the question of how television treats the issues. Too timidly, complain half or more of these women, and they cite as examples eight issues, including equal pay, widow- →

hood, rape, sexual harassment and pornography. (By way of contrast, wives and widows are more likely to regard TV as balanced on the issues.)

Is there anything these various groups can agree upon? To some extent, yes: on balance, all of them speak well of another group of women—the ones who appear in commercials and who, our respondents tend to say, are being portrayed more honestly and realistically these days.

That's a sign of progress, to be sure, but when it comes to the question of whether the time is right for a female anchorperson on the network evening news, the tea leaves are a little more difficult to read. Women polled on this question responded overwhelmingly that, in effect, it doesn't matter whether a man or a woman reads them the news.

Very well, then, how do they feel about the people they already see on the air? As we reported earlier, women were asked to name, off the tops of their heads, the male and female stars they most admire on TV. But our survey also had them consider a list we drew up of 15 male and 15 female TV personalities. For each of these personalities women were asked to rate how much appeal he or she has—from a great deal to none at all. (The difference between admiration and appeal is one of degree, the former generally being reserved for role models and idols; the latter simply a measure of how attractive or popular someone is.)

The candidates whose popularity we sought to compare were culled from established daytime and prime-time news and entertainment shows on all three commercial networks, and they include a representative mixture of whites, blacks and Hispanics (the three most visible demographic groups on TV). The chart above lists the eight most appealing males and eight most appealing females, along with the percentages of women who voted for each. The remaining seven candidates of each gender are named at the bottom of the chart. →

HOW DO THESE TV STARS RATE WITH WOMEN?

For each of 15 male and 15 female personalities, women were asked: "Please tell me how much appeal he (or she) has for you—a great deal, a fair amount, only a little, none at all, or don't you know enough about the person to have any opinion?" Here are the top finishers,* whose rankings were determined by taking the score in the first column only or, in case of a tie, by combining the scores of the first two columns.

SELECTED MEN	Great Deal of Appeal	Fair Amount of Appeal	Don't Know Enough
1. Dan Rather	46%	33%	9%
2. Tom Selleck	46%	24%	14%
3. Mike Wallace	36%	35%	15%
4. John Forsythe	33%	27%	25%
5. Phil Donahue	33%	27%	13%
6. Peter Jennings	30%	29%	30%
7. Bob Newhart	27%	34%	13%
8. Ricardo Montalban	27%	31%	16%
SELECTED WOMEN
1. Stefanie Powers	42%	28%	19%
2. Isabel Sanford	36%	31%	16%
3. Barbara Walters	35%	27%	9%
4. Linda Evans	34%	21%	30%
5. Jane Wyman	25%	26%	29%
6. Rita Moreno	25%	25%	33%
7. Jane Pauley	25%	23%	40%
8. Victoria Principal	23%	28%	23%

* Women also rated, in descending order, the following men (Tom Brokaw, Sherman Hemsley, Larry Hagman, Johnny Carson, Henry Winkler, Daniel J. Travanti, Mr. T) and the following women (Nell Carter, Valerie Bertinelli, Joan Collins, Veronica Hamel, Diane Sawyer, Mariette Hartley, Donna Mills).

What's most intriguing is that women, by and large, are more likely to have an opinion about male TV stars than they are about female stars, who amass larger percentages in the "Don't Know Enough" category. Also, women tend to give male personalities a higher rating in appeal. Taking a closer look, it's not hard to see why some demographic groups identify with certain actors more than with others. Black women generate the highest percentages of those who like Isabel Sanford (No. 2 overall) and Sherman Hemsley (No. 10) of The Jeffersons. But in general, it would appear that the most popular TV personalities manage to appeal to the most diverse audiences: John Forsythe of Dynasty and Fantasy Island's Ricardo Montalban, for example, draw support from young and old alike. Dan Rather appeals strongly to every constituency.

A singular lack of widespread appeal, on the other hand, seems to have KO'd the apparently resistible Mr. T. Despite the moderately strong backing of black women, the A Team star turns out to be, among those who know who he is, the least popular of the 15 males rated.

Is it possible to be liked and disliked simultaneously? Yes, as a TV GUIDE survey revealed of Howard Cosell a few years ago. And in this current study, Johnny Carson, although he ranks 12th out of 15 in popularity among male stars, is also the least appealing of all 30 personalities; 38 per cent of women say they like him only a little or not at all.

Coincidentally, our list of TV stars also included Tom Selleck and Barbara Walters. And therein lies another paradox. Though she may be the most admired woman, Walters appeals little or not at all to 29 per cent of the women surveyed (the highest such negative rating among the 15 female personalities listed). None of which, in the final analysis, seems to have done Walters much harm. Even in a crowded field, she has managed to wind up the third most popular female TV star (with a 62-per-cent rating).

Selleck scores even better. Having captured the affections of at least half of all single, divorced and separated women, the Magnum, P.I. star has emerged with an overall rating of 70 per cent, placing him second, among our 15 male stars, in the hearts of American women.

You may still wonder how both Selleck and Walters reached lofty heights—but you have to admire them for getting there. (END)

HOW WELL DOES TV COVER THE ISSUES?

For the 21 issues cited in the survey, women were first asked about each: "Tell me if you think television, in general, has devoted too much time in covering the issue, not enough time, or the right amount of time." (On no issue does the majority say TV gives the right amount or too much coverage.) Women were then asked about each: "Do you feel the issue is handled in a balanced, too sensational, or too timid a way?"

	Not Enough	Too Much	Right Amount	No Opinion
Widowhood	58%	4%	30%	8%

North Pole Mystery: Who Got There First?

This week: 'Cook and Peary' dramatizes the bitter rivalry that turned two Arctic explorers into lifelong enemies

By Geoffrey C. Ward

"Cook and Peary: The Race to the Pole," a two-hour CBS movie, is scheduled to air on Tuesday, Dec. 13, at 9 P.M. (ET). Consult local listings for time and channel in your area.

Scores of men lost their lives trying to reach the North Pole. Hundreds more shortened theirs. Why they took the risk remains something of a mystery. "Because it's there"—the mountaineer's rationale for attempting Everest—doesn't apply, because the North Pole really isn't there. It is an abstraction, the topmost point on the globe, with neither length nor breadth nor depth; an invisible spot 400 miles from the nearest land, locatable only by instruments, somewhere in the center of the great broken disk of ice, more than 1000 miles in diameter, that moves perpetually above the Arctic Ocean.

The Arctic landscape is stark and apparently lifeless, but the explorers were never alone. The Polar Eskimos of Greenland, the northernmost people on earth, actually live here. What these rugged, self-sufficient hunters really thought of the supply-laden strangers who came to seek their aid in finding a mysterious spot only the strangers could see in the middle of the frozen sea is not recorded.

The first Europeans to make their way into the Arctic region were looking for a Northern passage to Asia. The English mariner Henry Hudson was the earliest to try and fail to find the Pole in 1607, but the search for that elusive prize remained a sideshow for most of his successors until the Northwest Passage was finally discovered in the middle of the 19th century. Thereafter, the Pole itself became → the draw.

At first explorers tried simply to sail to it, but the ice pack—100 feet thick in places—seized and crushed their ships. Those who tried to continue on over the ice on foot often froze or starved to death. Still, they kept coming.

If anyone deserved to get to the Pole first it was the American admiral Robert E. Peary. He began dreaming of it as a small boy. Fame was his goad: "I shall not be satisfied until my name is known from one end of the world to the other," he wrote. "I must have fame." He worked at winning it for some 20 years, undertaking eight expeditions to the Far North. They nearly killed him. On one trip he lost eight of his toes to the cold; on another he and several companions were trapped for weeks on an ice floe. They survived by eating 34 of their 35 dogs, roasting each in turn over fragments of the sledges they had pulled.

Peary launched his final assault on the Pole from the Northwestern tip of Ellesmere Island in February of 1909. He was 52—tall and fiercely mustached, his face seamed by years of exposure to icy winds—and he knew that this would be his "last game upon the great Arctic chessboard. It was win this time or be forever defeated." With him onto the pack ice went 24 men, including Matthew Henson, his black servant and chief dog-driver, along with 19 sledges and 133 dogs. Winds and tides tore at the rumbling ice; black channels of open water blocked their way; floes slamming together forced pressure ridges skyward, blue-green walls of ice 50 feet high that had to be pierced or climbed. By April 2, the advance parties had all been sent back to base camp. Peary, Henson and four Eskimos struggled on alone. They had 133 miles to go.

Four days later they reached their goal, according to Peary's calculations, and he photographed the rest of his party. Henson waved the American flag; an Eskimo held up the banner of Peary's college fraternity, Delta Kappa Epsilon. "The Pole at last," Peary wrote. "The prize of three centuries. My dream and goal for 20 years." Later, safe again on land, he wired New York: "Stars and Stripes Nailed to Pole." Waiting for the ship that he expected to take him home in glory, he mused about a suitably impressive monument for the top of his mausoleum: marble or granite facing would be nice, he noted, with "bronze figures, Eskimo, dog, bear, musk ox, walrus, etc."

His elation ended quickly. Four days earlier, another American, Dr. Frederick A. Cook, announced that he and two Eskimos had beaten Peary to the Pole by nearly a year. Cook was only now returning home to a hero's welcome. He was an enormously likable man, soft-spoken and apparently magnanimous. "We are rivals, of course," he said of himself and Peary, "but the Pole is big enough for two."

Peary didn't think so. He and Cook had once been wary friends—the modest anthropologist had accompanied the Admiral on an earlier expedition—but he was now convinced that Cook was a liar, that he had never been near the Pole. And he was not afraid to say so.

The bitter quarrel that broke out before either explorer got home has never ended. Peary's case was damaged by the arrogance with which he insisted on making it: even an admiring friend admitted that when dealing with other people, Peary "needs no advice, seeks no sympathy." Cook's reputation was not aided by his subsequent imprisonment for mail fraud.

Peary died in 1920; his rival 20 years later. Each man still has his defenders and detractors. "Cook and Peary: The Race to the Pole" is written from Cook's point of view, although Peary's version of events is more generally accepted. We shall probably never know for certain which man first stood at the top of the world, and it is at least possible that neither of them did. But Cook was right about at least one thing. When Peary challenged him to provide proof of his claims, he answered, "I bring the same proofs as every other explorer, I bring my story." (END)

After these acting experiences, Madeline Kahn figures her new TV series offers brighter prospects

By Jack Hicks

"A missile, a human nose cone, you know? That's what it looks like ta me." Madeline Kahn inspects the magazine cover, poised on the front of which is a weight-sculpted, depilated, loin-clothed John Travolta. Two glossy women fall away from him like gantries from an ICBM about to lift off.

"Don't get me wrong," Kahn smiles impishly. "Health is a treasure. Before I started working out, I used to get sick a lot—often right before performances." She keens in the nasal tone that has cracked up millions since her movie debut in 1972 as Eunice Burns, Ryan O'Neal's impossibly dippy fiancée in "What's Up, Doc?" It's a marvelous high comic voice, one that swoops through the words in a line like birds through the morning air, one that makes statements like "Howaaaard-you-know-cheeese-gives-me-gaaaasss" sound convulsively funny—and one that will have to keep being funny every Tuesday night, if her new ABC sitcom, Oh Madeline, is to survive.

"But there's this craze to turn yourself into a machine—an instrument which will inspire longing and envy. Not me! I do a half-hour program each day by myself. I used to jog—it bored me and I felt like I should run through the streets of Manhattan all day long. I did Nautilus, but I thought, 'Madeline, a person shouldn't have to pay to fight machines every day of her life'."

Trim at 41, Kahn relaxes in her freshly leased Los Angeles apartment, an airy ficus-and-wicker affair towering on the cusp of Beverly Hills and Hollywood, and talks brightly about her past and her first television venture. She is smaller than she looks on screen, curling cozily on a sofa, clad in a faint pink sunsuit and matching designer paint-spattered anklets.

Madeline Kahn lives alone, both here and in her "real home," a six-room apartment on Manhattan's Park Avenue. She has never married, has no children and says there is no man in her life right now. "I think men feel uncomfortable being romantic with a funny woman. Maybe → the humor frightens them . . . Whatever . . ." she slices the mood with a jaunty wave. "Right now, this is it—me and this place—I don't even have a TV yet—and the show."

On a nearby table, psychoanalyst Otto Rank's tome, "Art and Artist," lies open. It is quickly apparent that the private Madeline Kahn contrasts with the lady flakes and wackos she has crafted in 16 films, most of them with leading comic talents (Sid Caesar, Mel Brooks, Gene Wilder, Marty Feldman, Harvey Korman, Bob Newhart, Richard Pryor, Jerry Lewis, Phil Silvers) of the last three decades.

"I owe Mel Brooks so much," she says. " 'Blazing Saddles' and 'Young Frankenstein' gave me enormous attention and were fun to make. He could've been family, like a Jewish uncle, and from the start, he encouraged me to cut loose—be funny, bawdy, crazy. He appreciated me. But really, people don't see the other sides to Madeline Kahn."

The lady doth not protest too much, but she speaks with pride of a career that stretches beyond Brooks' slapstick canvases. While her two Oscar nominations came from comic feature roles in "Paper Moon" (1973) and "Blazing Saddles" (1974), she got her start in Broadway shows, including "Two by Two," with Danny Kaye. Kahn also has an accomplished operatic voice (remember her aria, "Ah, Sweet Mystery of Life" at the end of "Young Frankenstein," as monster Peter Boyle is seducing her?).

"It all started when I was born—doesn't it always?—in Boston. My mother was very young, but very strong-minded, an early bohemian. Shortly after my father [a garment industry executive] returned from World War II, she divorced him and we moved to New York. She was going 18 hours a day, working, singing, modeling and finally—it became impossible for me to be by myself in New York.

"I say this without rancor," Kahn stops, shaping her thoughts carefully. "But I had a very difficult childhood. I don't want to compare hard times—everybody has a story, and it's what you do with it that counts, right? But my parents split up, then when I was 6, I was shipped off to a boarding school.

"I'm gonna sound like an orphan," Kahn says, laughing to ease the tension. "But going off to Manumit school [Bucks County, Pa.] really colored my life. I remember visiting when I was 6. I had this big turkey drumstick," she waves it in her voice. "I thought, 'This is gonna be OK, hey, every day a party, right?' Well, a little later, there I was, alone. I learned something most people don't find out until they're 30 or 40—that you are ultimately totally alone in this life."

"Sprung" from the school when her mother remarried, Kahn craved normalcy. "Oh boy, I got to public school back in New York and there were these rows of wooden desks—one all mine. I was dying to be ordinary—no black turtlenecks and white lipstick for this kid."

While one part of Kahn wanted to be a face in a saving crowd, another hoped that she'd be found special, through acting. "I got up the nerve to be in 'The Ugly Duckling' in junior high, but I got sick and almost missed the performance. I did the same thing later in high school and later at Hofstra [University, on Long Island, from which she graduated in 1964]. Obviously, I was terrified. Part of me wanted to perform, but part of me was absolutely afraid to stand out.

"When I did the lead in 'Guys and Dolls' at Hofstra, I came down with the measles. I said I couldn't go on, but I learned the entire role in my darkened bedroom and came to the final rehearsal. I did the show, and that was when I first experienced major laughter. It was a drug. I thought, 'Oooooo'." Her eyes grow wide, her mouth a tiny Clara Bow fruit. " 'This is gooood. I'm gonna like this'."

Is she as nervous as ever about Oh Madeline? "It's a brand new show for ABC," she answers. "It's the production company's first effort, none of the principals have done much regular TV, the title has been changed twice, and here it is Wednesday and we begin shooting Monday, and I haven't seen a final → script. Maybe I should be nervous—everything is so fluid—but I'm not, at least not yet.

"Besides," she concludes brightly. "I've been upstaged by a kid ['Paper Moon'], seduced by a monster ['Young Frankenstein'] and rejected by a dog ['Won Ton Ton']. There are no kids, dogs or monsters in Oh Madeline. It's perfect."

In fact, Oh Madeline is far less than perfect—its early season ratings have been mediocre at best—but it may last for ABC. Nestled as it is in the 9:30 P.M. "hammock" between Three's Company and Hart to Hart, it would seem to be guaranteed enough viewers to survive for a while, if only from viewer torpor.

Adapted from the British series, Pig in the Middle, Oh Madeline aspires to repeat the success of earlier Atlantic crossover successes such as Sanford and Son, All in the Family and Three's Company. While Pig in the Middle features a playfully adulterous male lead, his wife and the Other Woman, such fare is presumed to be too racy for family viewing in this country, so Americans will settle for Madeline Kahn starring as Madeline Wayne, married 10 years and desperate to "find herself" and inject some juice into her union. Husband Charlie, played serviceably by James Sloyan, is a successful writer of women's popular romances (under a female pseudonym).

They go in for various diets, workout programs, quests for inner peace and meaningful crafts and hobbies, the sum of which is alleged to be a funny but tender look at The Contemporary American Marriage and How It Survives.

Several weeks later, she's in the studio about to tape the show's second episode. "Hi," she waves. "Did they tell you? I got sick again? Last weekend, right before shooting the first show, I got food poisoning. I'm fine now. I don't know if I can stand getting sick every week, though. There must be a better way."

Kahn and company work quickly through the afternoon, a four-camera rehearsal. She is a trifle dizzy as Madeline Wayne, but you always have the sense she's feinting behind the dumbness, dizzy by design. Her timing is on the dot in most scenes, and she is patient with fluffed lines and retakes, pausing occasionally for comic asides.

"The special feature of this show is standing right there," says director J.D. Lobue. He points toward Kahn nearby, a confection in rose and burgundy being fussed up by a wardrobe lady. "When I first met her last March, we were doing readings for her cast husband, Charlie. She was a great relief. She walked in dressed in those little anklet socks and a big blousy dress with Joan Crawford shoulders—it blew me away. Then she read with different men for three hours. There are a lot of prima donnas in this town, but Madeline is not one of them."

During a lull in a kitchen scene, she must open some noodles and slice some vegetables, an occasion for a foray into Julia Child baby talk. "I can break lettuce with my bare hands!" she says, menacing a head of lettuce. "Now take the biiird," she says in a voice equal parts Gracie Allen and Julia Child, "and work the bone carefully with a chain saw. . . ."

By next evening, the episode is honed and ready for four-camera taping. To the front of the live audience sits Paula Kahn, Madeline's proud mother, beaming and gray-haired, quiet as her daughter works the studio crowd into an adoring throng. During a break in taping, the emcee introduces the elder Kahn to warm applause. "How was she as a mom?" a voice shouts from the audience. "At what point?" Kahn wisecracks back to laughter and applause.

As the taping grinds on, Kahn grows more subdued and workmanlike in the hot lights. Three hours after she has begun, she finally walks from the set. "You couldn't tell? Good. I fell and hit my head on the bench during the exercise scene. It hurts." She sighs. "Well, I guess it had to happen." Madeline Kahn smiles slowly, rubbing her head, an injury that will keep her in bed tomorrow and the next day, and walks pained but happy, toward the darkened seats where her mother sits. (END)

"Those Estée Lauder lips. Those Estée Lauder eyes." That sultry voice on those sexy perfume and cosmetic commercials belongs to Joan Van Ark, who plays Valene Ewing on Knots Landing. Van Ark (below) has been doing voice-overs for about 12 years, working with clients like Eastman Kodak, Whitman Chocolates, Carnation and Hallmark. "It's wonderful—you don't have to dress up or wear eye makeup," says Van Ark, who, before Knots, earned "two or three times" as much money in commercials as in TV or on stage. She describes her "perfumey voice" as "180 degrees away from Valene," and says her character would never wear Estée Lauder. "She used to wear Heaven Sent," says Van Ark. "I'd guess she wears Oscar de la Renta now."

Bardot: the Facts of Life

The steamy life of Brigitte Bardot (right, in her heyday) will receive TV-movie treatment by CBS next spring. According to producer Linda Yellen ("Jacobo Timerman: Prisoner Without a Name, Cell Without a Number," "Playing for Time"), "The movie will concentrate on the sexier parts of Bardot's life," including her first marriage, to French director Roger Vadim. The plum Bardot part has not yet been cast, though Yellen says she would consider Bo Derek—or an unknown. The winner will play Bardot from age 15 to her present 49. The most obvious candidate, Bardot herself, is probably not a possibility, since she once vowed never to work in Hollywood.

The Brother He Always Wanted

Richard Thomas (above) says the CBS TV-movie "The Master of Ballantrae" isn't much like the original feature film that starred Errol Flynn. "It's not the Flynn swashbuckler—it's very dark and disturbing." Based on a Robert Louis Stevenson novel, the movie focuses on a pair of 18th-century Scottish brothers who are strangely obsessed with one another. Thomas and Michael York star as the siblings, "a terrific piece of casting," according to Thomas. "I've always fancied that Michael and I are sort of alike in appearance and quality, and that it would be very good for us to play brothers." Besides, says Thomas, who rode, fenced and used an accent for his part, "Michael and I fight a helluva duel together."

Peddling Her Prose

"When you come to Hollywood and land a dumb-blonde role, people don't want to know what else you can do," says Lydia Cornell (right). Nevertheless, Cornell, who plays Too Close for Comfort's comely Sara Rush, is putting a new iron in the show-business fire—she's written 500 pages of a book, tentatively titled "The Seduction of Sylvia." The author describes her work as "an epic—like 'The Thorn Birds'." While still trying to muster up interest from publishers, Cornell is also hoping the story will be picked up for television miniseries treatment. Meanwhile, she has written several "useful" scripts for Too Close (new episodes of which will appear in syndication in early '84) but because "they're mostly about Jackie and Sara, and this is Ted [Knight]'s show," Cornell hasn't offered them to Too Close producers. "Who knows," she says, "maybe I'll save them for a future series."

The Way It Wasn't

FRANCES

Question: When is a bad movie worth watching? Answer: When it features an Oscar-nominated, powerhouse performance such as the one Jessica Lange gives in "Frances." As the tormented '30s film star Frances Farmer, Lange (right) found herself steeped in rebellion and rage that "spilled all over into other areas of my life. . . . I took on the characteristic of Frances that was elemental in her demise—battling every little thing that came along." Among the jokers is a wacky guy named Mr. Mambo—in actuality, a character Candy created during his days at Canada's Big City Comedy. Mr. Mambo, who's also appeared on SCTV and Saturday Night Live, came to life when a Big City producer asked Candy "to do some weird character." "You mean some kind of Mr. Mambo?" asked Candy. And a star was born.

For actress Meg Bennett (below), playing Julia Newman on The Young and the Restless would seem to be enough hard work. But as an associate staff writer for the show, Bennett also pens an 80-page script every week. Though Julia has changed from weak and victimized to a self-assured woman chiefly because of Bennett's influence, the actress-writer has one hard and fast rule: she never writes for her own character. Bennett's dual career leaves little time for socializing, but "I really like working all the time," she says. Julia would approve.

Judicial Football

The fate of college football and its present relationship with network television is now in the hands of the Supreme Court, which will review lower-court decisions against the NCAA's sole control of TV rights to the sport. Network insiders are steeling themselves for a judgment against the prevailing system and are preparing to cut up a new TV package, or to become embroiled in a bidding war involving individual schools and conferences, syndicators and cable. The NCAA apparently devoutly wishes for a scenario that would somewhat resemble the status quo: two networks would control Saturday's daytime action, but there would be open and competitive bidding for Saturday night games. "This could clear up the antitrust thing," says one network insider. "The Saturday night game could be a place where anyone who wants to could do their own thing."

Rust-y Fireworks?

If you've noted a change of tone since Art Rust Jr. became host of USA Cable Network's Sports Probe, well, it's intentional. The fiery Rust, who took over for the restrained Larry Merchant, promises: "I'm going to make it explosive; I'm going to transfer my radio style to television. I'll be asking tough questions and I don't really care if the guest gets up and walks out of the studio."

Golden Throats

Here's the expected roster of ABC's broadcast team, anchored by Jim McKay, for February's Winter Olympics in Sarajevo, Yugoslavia: Bob Beattie and Frank Gifford, Alpine skiing; Dick Button, figure skating; Al Michaels and Ken Dryden, ice hockey; and Olympic announcing rookie Eric Heiden (below), speed skating (the sport, of course, in which he won five gold medals in the 1980 Olympics). ABC is planning 63½ hours of Olympics coverage from February 7-19, taking up virtually all of prime time.

News Update

Payment For Jackson Video Causes Flap

Michael Jackson's latest video has triggered a controversy that may change the relationship between recording artists and MTV. MTV paid roughly $250,000 for the 14-minute "Thriller" and a documentary on the video, according to record-industry sources who said this could set a precedent leading many major artists to start charging for their rock videos.

"It's the kiss of death for MTV," said one industry executive. "How can they pay one artist and not another?" MTV has based its popular 24-hour channel almost exclusively on video clips supplied free by record companies.

While MTV executives acknowledge that money changed hands between their channel and Michael Jackson's management company for a documentary on "Thriller," they deny that they paid for the video of "Thriller." "We don't pay for videos," said Les Garland, MTV vice-president of programming. "Our money went to the Jackson documentary."

But record industry sources maintain that MTV paid for "Thriller" and the documentary in exchange for some exclusivity on both. The video is being shown exclusively on MTV until Dec. 14. NBC's Friday Night Videos will show "Thriller" on Dec. 23 and is paying its standard administrative fee of about $1200.

Showtime also paid for the video and documentary, according to director of business affairs Bruce Heller. "We've never paid for video clips before," said Heller, "but we don't look at 'Thriller' as a rock video. It's really a short film." Showtime has exclusive pay-TV rights from Dec. 15 until the end of 1984.

Home Box Office was offered the video and the documentary for $800,000 but quickly turned down the deal. "It was the grossest kind of exploitation from Jackson's people to ask for that kind of money," said Bridget Potter, HBO's senior vice-president of original programming. —Howard Polskin

A Team Tops Week's Ratings

Spurred by The A Team and the Kennedy miniseries, NBC enjoyed its best ratings week of the season, trailing week-winning CBS by less than one point. NBC is still No. 3 for the season and for the crucial November sweeps period. But The A Team's 41 per cent of the audience beat out both 60 Minutes and Dallas to win the week, and Kennedy rebounded from its loss to "The Day After" in its opening episode to finish fourth and sixth with the next two episodes, which ran in the next rating week.

The phenomenon of The A Team has not gone unnoticed by the other networks. ABC has commissioned a two-hour series pilot called Command 5, featuring five "mavericks and misfits." One of the five, former pro lineman John Matuszak, is 6-feet-8 and weighs 285 pounds. He makes Mr. T look almost tiny. —Richard Turner

To Hold but Not to Have

Wedding bells are expected to ring for Blake and Krystle (John Forsythe and Linda Evans) on the Dec. 28 episode of Dynasty. The couple, you may recall, annulled their marriage after learning last season that Krystle hadn't been legally divorced from her first husband when she took up with Blake. Now, however, look for Krystle and her attendant, Fallon (Pamela Sue Martin), to walk down the aisle wearing the best that money can't buy: they will be adorned with more than $250,000 worth of diamonds and pearls—borrowed for the occasion from Tiffany's of Beverly Hills.

Make It Again, Sam

NBC is reaching into the past for some of its future projects. According to insiders, the network plans to revive the play "Mister Roberts" in a live broadcast from NBC's Burbank studio this spring. No star has been cast yet for the title role, which Henry Fonda played on Broadway and on screen. Jules Verne's "Around the World in 80 Days" will be redone as an eight-hour miniseries, its cast and crew still to be picked. Closer to production, a four-hour adaptation of Ernest Hemingway's previously filmed "The Sun Also Rises" is expected to be shot in Paris and Spain for airing next fall.

A Tsar Is Born

NBC also plans to do some original programming. Peter the Great, scheduled for fall '85, is a nine-hour miniseries based on Robert K. Massie's Pulitzer Prize-winning biography of Russia's tsar Peter I, who ruled from 1682 to 1725. Director and executive producer Lawrence Schiller ("The Executioner's Song") says he has been invited to film in the USSR. Although no star has been picked so far to play the tsar, 40 Soviet actors have been selected to learn English for roles in the show.

Wish Fulfillment

ABC's Lottery!, which each week focuses on a group of fictional sweepstakes winners, will inject a little realism into one of its future episodes by introducing an actual lottery winner, who will play himself or herself. The role will be cast—literally—on Dec. 19, when Lottery! stars Marshall Colt and Ben Murphy pick the winning envelope in New York State's "Lucky 7's" game and present one of 20 finalists with the $1-million prize. The lucky recipient will then be flown out to Los Angeles, where Lottery! is filmed, to do a scene with Colt, who plays Internal Revenue Service agent Eric Rush. The scene calls for Rush to give the lottery winner some advice—on how to deal with the IRS. Now that's realism.

HE WAS JUST CLOWNING AROUND!
Jeff Greenfield credits Howdy Doody with a number of subversive activities, including portraying corrupt officials, showcasing native Americans and throwing pies at adults ["Howdy Doody: The First Hippie," Nov. 12]. If these activities put Howdy Doody on the FBI list, then there must be files on The Lone Ranger (he fought corruption and had Tonto at his side), the Three Stooges (never a show without a pie) and the entire Ringling Bros., Barnum & Bailey Circus. After all, they have clowns who (hold your ears, boys and girls) squirt seltzer. Surely this article makes Greenfield look like one of Howdy's radical underground cohorts—Flub-a-Dub.

Rita Lowy
Bellevue, Wash.

To try to analyze Howdy Doody as being anything more than just pure entertainment for children is absurd. I suggest that anyone under 30 or over 30 who took this article seriously sit down, have a Hostess cupcake, not try to analyze the past, simply cherish and remember its priceless memories. For some of us, it'll always be "Howdy Doody Time."

Tom Johnson
The Howdy Doody Times
Frankfort, N.Y.

Greenfield has placed upon the shoulders of a puppet and his companions the blame for the youth of America rising up in the '60s. Normal intelligence dictates that parental guidance and the world situation would be more responsible for the actions of young adults than would one TV show. A puppet could not convince me to ignore the teachings of my parents!

Lorena Rigg
Sarasota, Fla.

It wasn't until the end of Greenfield's article that I began to suspect it was written tongue-in-cheek. Take his observations seriously! I look for this generation being raised on Us-vs.-Them and Power-Is-Everything (Superfriends, He-Man, video games, etc.) to take us into Armageddon.

S. Dequer
Monrovia, Cal.

[Jeff Greenfield replies: The next time I write a piece of satire, my tongue is going to be so far in my cheek it will push my front teeth out of shape.]

A CHILDREN'S ADVOCATE
Sid Caesar, whom I used to love to watch, wrote a very unfair article ["How to Make Television Funnier," Nov. 5]. Everything he doesn't like about humor on TV—the stupidity and grossness of it—he attributed to children, childishness or "the child in us." Anyone who knows children well knows that their humor includes an incredible range—it is slapstick and subtle, weird and ingenious, angry and loving, boring and hilarious. It is way ahead of what passes for adult humor.

TERMINAL SUDSITIS?
NBC is wrong in trying to make St. Elsewhere "another soap opera with scalpels" ["'We Were Dead': It Was St. Nowhere . . . Until a Curious Call Came from NBC," Nov. 12]. It used to be one of my favorite programs, only because it tried to be realistic and assumed that its viewers were intelligent. Obviously, this attitude has changed.

Susan Goldring
Barefoot Bay, Fla.

Personally, I thought St. Elsewhere was just fine without adding new characters in an attempt to bolster ratings. Maybe next, NBC will hire Mr. T to play a brain surgeon and I can shut the darn thing off.

Merry Christmas!

What's that you say? You're not ready? Tree not yet trimmed? Gifts not yet wrapped?

Tough. Whether you like it or not, it's time to get merry. Orders from network command.

To add weight to this directive, NBC wants you to know that its Christmas in Washington special will be staged before an audience of "Washington dignitaries and prominent families." Clear enough? If the dignified and the prominent are prepared to look Yulish on December 15, who are we to hold back?

The NBC variety special is being hand-woven by producers Gary Smith and Dwight Hemion, the Barnum & Bailey of TV variety. They promise a lineup that includes Andy Williams, Leslie Uggams of Fantasy and the multilingual Spanish balladeer Julio Iglesias.

It is not certain whether President and Mrs. Reagan will attend this NBC show as they did last year, but they are expected at the Shiloh Baptist Church in Washington for In Performance at the White House, a concert of gospel music introduced by soprano Leontyne Price.

The other notable event at this time of year is Frank Sinatra's birthday. Coincidentally, Variety Clubs International, the show-biz charity, throws an All Star Party for Frank Sinatra to mark the donation in Frank's name of a new unit at The Children's Orthopedic and Medical Center in Seattle. The gala is attended by Carol Burnett, Burt Reynolds, Dionne Warwick, Bob Newhart, Cary Grant and Everybody. Sinatra's philanthropies are movingly honored in a fine oration by Richard Burton.

The legendary diva Maria Callas is remembered this week, on the 60th anniversary of her birth, in an unusual Great Performances tribute from four opera houses. "Callas: An International Celebration" takes us to La Scala in Milan, the Lyric Opera of Chicago, the Paris Opera and London's Covent Garden to hear excerpts from a variety of operas performed by Placido Domingo, Renata Scotto, Kiri Te Kanawa and others. And to top it off, some rarely seen footage of the great soprano herself.

Luciano Pavarotti in Concert puts the spotlight on an operatic talent that these days is seldom out of it. In this San Francisco recital, Pavarotti concentrates on songs rather than arias, but there's no question about where his real strength lies. His renditions of the "Lamento di Federico" from "L'Arlesiana" and "Una furtiva lagrima" from "L'Elisir d'Amore" tower above the rest of the program.

Football fans will hardly need to be told that the Washington Redskins will meet the Dallas Cowboys in Sunday's NFL Football game. But just in case you hadn't heard. . . .

In some areas programs may not be seen on the days indicated.

It's a mixed-bag network-movie week, with action-entertainment the order of the top choices.

John Huston's 1981 Victory is a carefree mix of wartime heroics and sport, a blend of "The Great Escape" and "Rocky" in its appeal, tense in its unfolding, predictable in its outcome and very enjoyable on its own level. The setting, for starters, is a POW camp in Germany in 1943 that happens to house Michael Caine, as a British officer who was a prewar soccer star, and Sylvester Stallone, a feisty American. A German officer, Max von Sydow, also a soccer man, starts with the idea of morale building via the game between POWs and local German soldiers. His superiors snowball the project into a huge propaganda show, to be staged in Occupied Paris in Colombes Stadium before 50,000 Frenchmen, to prove Nazi superiority. The POWs, their team improved by the addition of concentration-camp inmates, among them Pelé (the great soccer star named "Sportsman of the Century" by sportswriters), hope to use the occasion for an escape. And if the movie's climax doesn't have you in a sweat of excitement—well, go back to your knitting. Some 20 of the film's 117 minutes have been cut for time and language.

Outdoor adventure is undertaken in Cook & Peary: The Race to the Pole, the teleplay by I.C. Rapoport firmly taking the side of Frederick Albert Cook, the explorer and physician who claimed to have discovered the North Pole in April 1908. Officially, Congress and later scientific investigation have supported the claim of Adm. Robert E. Peary that he discovered the Pole in April 1909. Cook fought to vindicate himself until his death in 1940. The movie favors him, initially with the casting of Richard Chamberlain as Cook and Rod Steiger as Peary, loading the dice all the way, though Steiger outacts Chamberlain. We even get to see Cook's bare-shoulders-in-bed wedding night although it was Peary's wife, nonexistent in the film, who accompanied her husband on expeditions. The movie is superficially interesting, under Robert Day's direction, although the production values are disappointing.

A second TV-movie, Through Naked Eyes, written by Jeffrey Bloom and directed by John Llewellyn Moxey, is a kinky little thriller with oddball and fascinating characters. Refreshingly set in Chicago, it offers David Soul and Pam Dawber as neighbors in a high-rise development who "spy" on each other via telescope and binoculars; someone else is also spying, as a series of murders indicates. It's a spine tingler, its characters neatly fleshed out.

A third TV-movie, Little House: Look Back to Yesterday, the first of three TV-

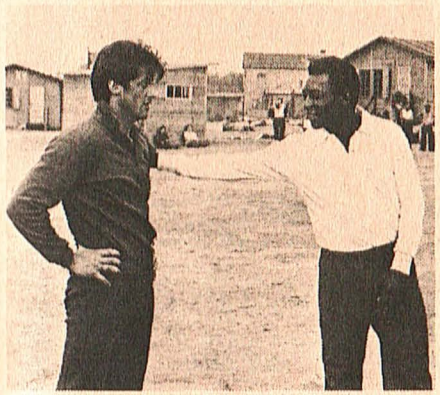
VICTORY



Sylvester Stallone and Pele

John Huston directed this 1981 POW drama—which has more in common with the World Cup than World War II.

The story begins at a Nazi camp, where Maj. Karl von Steiner (Max von Sydow) recognizes a British prisoner named Colby (Michael Caine) as a one-time soccer star. A former player himself, Von Steiner proposes a sporting match between a POW squad and a German side.

Promised better rations for his men, and a chance to choose players from other camps, Colby agrees. But the German High Command soon sees the match's propaganda possibilities, and decides to play it for keeps. Colby has other problems too: his "all-stars" are out of sync (and out of shape); senior Allied officers in the camp regard him as a collaborator; and he's having a rocky time handling a pugnacious Yank named Hutch (Sylvester Stallone), who's determined to make the team—then make his escape.

Soccer greats Pele, Bobby Moore and Osvaldo Ardilles have speaking roles. Rose: Tim Pigott-Smith. Shurlock: Julian Curry. The Forger: Clive Merrison. Fileu: Paul Van Himst. (2 hrs.)

HIGH SCHOOLS
2 PM (9)

A film essay based on a 1983 Carnegie Foundation report on public high schools in the United States.

Though that may sound as dry as an eraser, public high schools are "where the battle for the future of America will be won or lost," says report author Ernest L. Boyer. This documentary not only provides information on (and recommendations for) secondary education, it also presents telling impressionistic vignettes of educators and students interacting during and between classes. Interspersed are candid comments from teachers about their profession and its problems. Says one: "People say, 'Well, what's so hard about teaching?' I say, 'Do you have one teen-ager at home? Try to imagine dealing with 120 a day.' It's just crazy at times." And others talk about having to spend too much of their on-the-job time away from their teen-age charges, taking care of what the report calls "bookkeeping."

Filmed in urban and suburban high schools in Maryland, Massachusetts, Missouri and New Jersey by writer-director Charles Guggenheim. Canadian actor Gordon Pinsent is the narrator. (60 min.)

THROUGH NAKED EYES

David Soul and Pam Dawber

David Soul and Pam Dawber star in a 1983 TV-movie that combines elements of Hitchcock's "Rear Window" and Antonioni's "Blow-Up."

Like those theatrical thrillers, this drama deals with voyeurism, alienation and murder. In this case the voyeurism is prelude to romance, between a classical flutist (Soul) and a planetarium guide (Dawber) who begin their unusual relationship through a lens darkly, by spying on one another from their windows in a Chicago high-rise.

But just as this somewhat kinky romance comes into more familiar focus, the image blurs, the plot thickens, the flutist comes under suspicion in a series of brutal homicides behind other windows, and it takes a jolting climax to restore resolution to this polished puzzler.

CALLAS: AN INTERNATIONAL CELEBRATION

Opera greats take to major stages in Europe and the U.S. to offer a 60th-birthday salute to the "prima donna assoluta" (1923-77).

From Milan's La Scala Opera House: Agnes Baltesa and Placido Domingo offer arias and a duet, under the baton of Lorin Maazel.

From Chicago's Lyric Opera: Ileana Cotrubas and Renata Scotto join Jon Vickers and Alfredo Kraus in an operatic concert, conducted by Bruno Bartoletti.

From the Paris Opera: Seiji Ozawa conducts selections from Berlioz' "The Damnation of Faust," sung by Jessye Norman, Jose van Dam and Kenneth Riegel.

From London's Royal Opera House: Kiri Te Kanawa and James McCracken in a fully staged excerpt from the last act of Verdi's "Otello." Colin Davis conducts.

Leonard Bernstein is host for the gala, which includes rare kinescope footage of Callas doing arias by Bizet, Massenet and Verdi, and part of Act II from Puccini's "Tosca." (2 hrs., 30 min.)

COOK & PEARY: THE RACE TO THE POLE

MOVIE
9 PM (6)

Richard Chamberlain and Rod Steiger are poles apart in this adventure-packed historical drama.

Its focal point is the controversy over whether U.S. Navy commander Robert E. Peary (Steiger) or a rival explorer, physician Frederick Cook (Chamberlain), discovered the North Pole. In 1911, Congress recognized Peary's 1909 expedition; the sympathies expressed in this 1983 TV-movie lie with Cook's claim that he reached the pole the year before.

Ironically, the two started out on good terms and, as the film depicts, even made an expedition together, an 1891 trek to northern Greenland. But later, as Cook becomes enthralled by the awesome beauty of Arctic wastelands—and increasingly intolerant of Peary's "unrelenting thirst for fame"—he sets out on his own for the top of the world.

Filmed in Greenland and Canada's Northwest Territories. Marie: Diane Venora. Troth: Michael Gross. Henson: Samm-Art Williams. Whitney: Timothy Webber. Roosevelt: Walter Massey. Bartlett: Donald Pilon. (2 hrs.)

THE MAN FROM SNOWY RIVER

The New York Mets once had two pitchers named Bob Miller, and the National Basketball Association has two Eddie Johnsons, but figure this: Australia has two movie directors named George Miller. The better known Miller made "The Road Warrior" and the "Nightmare at 20,000 Feet" segment of this summer's "Twilight Zone—The Movie." The other Miller made this 1982 Western—and it just happens to be Australia's most successful native-made box-office attraction.

It's a handsomely filmed production (shot in Australia's stunningly beautiful High Country) and its straightforward storyline (about an orphan boy's coming of age) is based on a classic Australian poem by A.B. "Banjo" Paterson. But, surely, part of the picture's success is owing to Hollywood—in the person of Kirk Douglas, who has a field day

DROP-OUT FATHER

Contemporary manners, mores and family life are gently satirized in this 1982 TV-movie.

The manners, mores and family here are those of ad executive Ed McCall (Dick Van Dyke), who makes a six-figure salary, maintains a fashionable suburban home and has four attractive children from a 20-year marriage. Yet Ed feels that this American Dream has become a nightmare: his Madison Avenue cronies are pushing deodorant spray guns; his daughter, a Vassar sophomore, is a Hindu; a teen-age son has become enamored of hard rock and fast girls; and his wife has become dependent on her psychiatrist.

So Ed quits his job, locks himself in his bedroom and emerges after 11 days (of reading "War and Peace") with a new game plan for happiness: burn the family's credit cards, sell the house and cars and head for a new life of adventure . . . in Manhattan.

Katherine: Mariette Hartley. Kannon: George Coe. Draper: William Daniels. Tony: Monte Markham. Elizabeth: Martha Byrne. Peggy: Claudia Lonow. David: Charles Bloom. Bud: Michael Cummings. Dr. Lefkowitz: George Wyner. (Repeat; 2 hrs.)

movie spinoffs of the 1974-83 Little House on the Prairie series, is strictly for devotees thereof. Non-familiars may find it a confusing and soggy muddle, involving Albert Ingalls being stricken by an incurable disease, much to the distress of his father and sister. They're portrayed by Matthew Laborteaux, Michael Landon and Melissa Gilbert, all series alumni.

The week's second theatrical premiere is of 1980's Coast to Coast, a comedy offering Dyan Cannon as a runaway wife and Robert Blake as a trucker in a cross-country chase. It starts out amusingly but settles into a series of crash-bang encounters with a super-crash climax and little more.

On their second run, 1980's Oh, God! Book II has George Burns trading one-liners with a 10-year-old, but 1982's made-for-TV Drop-Out Father has some nice things to say about middle-class materialism via Dick Van Dyke and Mariette Hartley.

ON CABLE

1982's Frances, new to cable, is based on the life of Frances Farmer, the actress whose Hollywood and Broadway career was prelude to mental and physical breakdowns and abuse. The film is an erratic and confusing recounting of that career, but what does come through is Jessica Lange's creation of a young woman of spirit and intelligence waging valiant war against internal and external pressures. It's an extraordinary performance, both devastating and enthralling.

Two other newcomers, both oldies, are noteworthy. 1964's Rio Conchos is a tough, slam-bang Western of the old school, with such old hands as Richard Boone, Stuart Whitman and Tony Franciosa in the saddle. And 1943's Sherlock Holmes Faces Death has Basil Rathbone and Nigel Bruce finding corpses at old Musgrave Manor with their usual high style.

In some areas broadcast movies may not be seen on the days indicated. For times of cable movies, see program listings and Pay-TV Movie Guide.

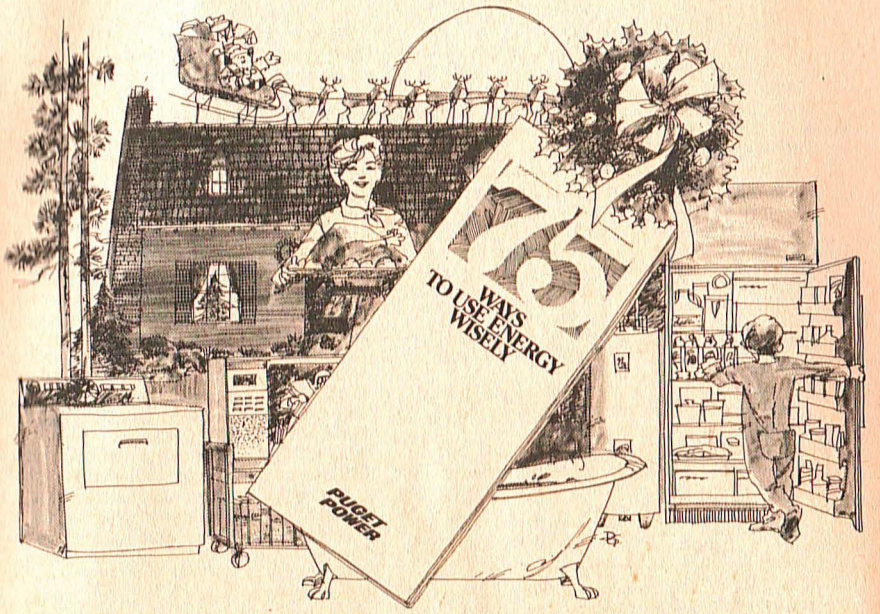
May we recommend a good book for the holidays?



This time of year you do more baking and entertaining, cook bigger meals, even pop more popcorn. The kids are usually home from school for the holidays, too. And that means more showers, more TV watching, more refrigerator raids, more dishes and laundry—more of everything that uses electricity. That's where this book can help. It's free and full of good advice on how to use electricity wisely so you don't wind up paying for wasted energy. For your free copy, mail the coupon or ask at your local Puget Power office.

GIRLS! GIRLS! GIRLS!

That's what Benny Hill's shows are all about—a far cry from his earlier days as milkman, drummer and bridge operator

Alfred Hawthorn Hill doesn't own a car ("I don't drive"), has never been married ("I was jilted twice") and has never been to the U.S. ("A serious omission"). But then, those are serious answers. It's when you mention ladies, especially scantily clad ladies, that you see the glint in his eyes, the famous schoolboy-rude glare. "Girls?" Now it's Benny Hill who tells you, "The girls on my shows, I handpick them myself." As if you couldn't have guessed!

Born in Southampton, England, 58 years ago, he was a milkman, a bridge operator and a drummer in a dance band before becoming a cult hero to millions of depraved TV viewers around the world.

"Even as a very young kid, my ambition in life was to be the principal comic in a show. We had traveling shows in those days, kind of like vaudeville. It was family entertainment so you couldn't say it was burlesque, except that every sketch had a pretty girl dressed like a maid with a scanty costume and black stockings. The comic was always billed as the star of the show, although no one had ever heard of him. Well, that's what I wanted to be. That comic. I'd sit in the audience and stare up at him and think to myself, 'Everybody loves him, they applaud for him, look at all the laughs he gets.' I liked that idea. And he was up there with all those girls. I knew right away that was for me."

At the age of 16, Benny landed his first job as a comic. "I traveled with a troupe of 12 girl dancers." (Half grin.) "It was a new town every night." (Twinkle in his eyes.) "What a way to travel." (The guilty smile.)

It was years of playing two-horse towns and pounding on producers' doors before he could make it in the one town that really mattered: London. And then it was the American comedians he used to see at the Palladium whose influence put some extra polish on his natural talent. "I remember it must have been around 1949, 1950, maybe even 1951, Danny Kaye played the Palladium and did very well. Of course I was brought up on American films as a kid, so I understood American humor. But these guys were different. Danny Thomas followed him into the Palladium and I went to see him for three nights running. He was the first performer I'd ever seen who talked and told jokes as if he was telling the truth. English comics always tell jokes and you know it's a joke. But guys like Danny Thomas talked about their lives in a funny way."

That was just about the time that Benny Hill first broke into television. So British audiences have known that "out of the corner of his eye" smirk for more than 30 years. Yet it's only since the late '60s that he's turned into an international star. "I left the BBC to go with Thames Television 14 years ago. I agreed to do five or six one-hour specials a year. Now I only do two a year. I guess in all I've made more than 50 hours of television shows for Thames, not counting the shows I'm doing this year. They're shown as one-hour specials in England, but then they get chopped up by Thames and edited into the 25-minute segments that you see in the States."

Benny writes everything, often with the help of an old joke book. He writes each show very completely, with incredible detail. He won't simply suggest that a scene be played in front of a medieval house. He'll actually describe the house down to the crest over the door and the cloth curtains in the hallway. Because he's such a perfectionist and scripts so tightly, there is very little ad-libbing. He knows what he wants and that's the way he wants it to happen. If something is to be changed, he wants to be the one to change it. As one member of the Thames production team puts it, "We follow his instructions slavishly. He is invariably right."

As any Benny Hill fan knows, the show is a combination of location shooting and in-studio work. It's put together in front of a live audience and tickets are nearly impossible to come by. The dates are announced two months in advance, and within days all the tickets are gone.

The Benny Hill Show is shown throughout Europe, the Far East and Australia. It's even dubbed into foreign languages. "My show is a very big hit in Spain. Benny Heeeel. Of course Spanish television is so boring that anything would be a hit as long as it isn't four guys sitting around talking about the harvest. And it's also a big hit in Australia. Aw-stry-lya. I love it there. My sister lives there and she has a 19-year-old daughter. My 19-year-old niece introduces me to all of her 19-year-old girl friends. Aw-stry-lya's wonderful!"

In England, Benny Hill's show is a giant hit, usually ranking in the top three. In the United States, it's an acquired taste and not everyone has acquired it. The show has many loyal fans and is seen in 48 of the top 50 markets, but it seldom wins its time period.

Hill says, "I think the reason my shows are successful is that I'm doing on television the nearest thing to the kind of stage revue I loved as a kid. I don't do blue shows. I do family shows. They're not dirty, they're funny. I only make the kinds of programs I like to watch.

"I especially like to write on airplanes. It helps pay for the trip. After all, by the time you see a movie and have something to eat, there's nothing else to do except spend seven hours listening to music on headsets. I find a lot of writing gets done out of boredom."

Not that he's often bored, he insists. He's reached that stage in life where he can afford to pamper himself in whatever whims and fancies take his whim and fancy. He lives by himself in a large but sparsely decorated flat in a fashionable London area near Hyde Park. If he wants to buy something, he buys it, although he says he doesn't concern himself with → possessions. If he feels like going someplace, he gets up and goes. That he does all the time. "I'm not very rich, but I have enough money to do anything I want. I live on my own. I guess the people across the street think what a strange man they have for a neighbor. They see me walking the streets. I walk a lot. That's not only because I like to walk, which gives me a chance to think, it's also because I don't have a car. In fact, I don't have any possessions. I don't own any paintings or antique furniture. Even my television set is rented. I buy the cheapest watches possible. So if I lose one I don't have to worry about it. It means the only thing I can spend my money on is traveling and having a good time. I'm a great traveler. I love it. I'm also pretty good at having a good time. Actually it's not a bad life, all things considered."

Over the past few years he's been traveling more than ever before. It seems he's discovered a way of getting paid to go somewhere. It's called "commercials." He sells beer to the Greeks, TV sets to the Spanish, crackers to the French and a chain store to the Australians. "Commercials are wonderful. They fly you somewhere nice, let you work a few days with a lot of pretty girls, and when you're finished you can spend a week on the beach." Yet with all of his travels, oddly enough, he's never been to the States. "It's a serious omission. No, I've never been to America. I've had offers to work there, but I'm not a cabaret artist and I wouldn't be very good in Las Vegas. Anyway, I'm not keen on working that hard. As for going there just for pleasure, well, I think that would be a little tricky now."

Being a cult hero is not without its responsibilities and hazards. "I know what it's like to be invited someplace when you're a television star. You get passed around from party to party so people can point and say, there's Benny Hill. I mean, you take a bath, wash behind your ears, put on clean underwear, hire a car to get you there, and then you only meet people who want to meet you. See what I mean? You never meet anyone. They meet you. It's a bit boring."

So America may just have to wait. Until he can figure out a way to see the States on his terms, he says he'll stick to his regular haunts like the South of France and Spain. "I spend a lot of time in those two places. I'm always going there. I especially enjoy Spain, even if I can only say two things in Spanish. One is to order a meal. The other gets my face slapped. But how can you not love Spain? Wine there is only two dollars a gallon."

Not surprisingly, as he's a big star in Spain, they don't leave him alone there either. "Benny Heeeel, Benny Heeeel. I had to stop going to Barcelona because there were too many English tourists. I'd sit down at a café and all of a sudden one of those English coach tours would pull up and the Spanish tour guide would announce over the loudspeaker to everyone on the bus, there's Benny Heeeel. So everyone would pile off the bus and sit down at my table. Of course they never ordered anything to drink, which meant the waiters would get angry at me. They'd tell me they didn't like me because my friends never spent any money."

In Madrid it's a little different. "I like to go to cabaret shows at night, but I always get introduced by the emcee and have to stand up to take a bow. Then they bring on the girl singer and she has to try to sing while people are climbing over the seats asking for my autograph. It's ridiculous. If I sign them, she hates it. If I don't, the audience hates it."

And then there's the Spanish press. "They always manage to find me. And the stories they print, well, I don't know where they get them. They make them up. Not long ago there was a story about my buying a huge mansion in Marbella right next door to Sean Connery. That proves they really don't know me. Marbella is snobsville. I would never be happy there at all. On the other hand, I keep ringing them to deny the rumors about my romance with Charlotte Rampling." (There's that schoolboy-rude glare again . . . then a pause . . . then a shrug.) "But those they never print!" (END)

How Good—or Bad—Is Monday Night Football?

You'll find Howard ('firm grasp of the obvious') Cosell, marvelous visuals and much, much more to love/hate about ABC's prime-time spectacle

By Dick Friedman

Every autumn Tuesday (and sometimes on autumn Mondays, Fridays and Saturdays, too), football fans across America shake their heads over the previous evening's telecast of Monday Night Football and dissect the botched assignments, the missed handoffs and the unnecessary roughness. They're talking, of course, not about the action on the field but in the broadcast booth. There, consensus has it, Howard Cosell and Co. have made a laughingstock of themselves and the sport since the show began in 1970.

Yes, it's fashionable to dump on MNF, or to say you watch the game on TV but listen on the radio. And certainly the detractors were out in force earlier this season. Ratings were down. There were → some unappetizing matchups. The show was breaking in an untested rookie announcer, O.J. Simpson, and there were doubts about whether he'd fit in with Cosell and partners Frank Gifford and Dandy Don Meredith. Perhaps worst of all, in the season's first contest Cosell referred to Washington Redskins wide receiver Alvin Garrett as a "little monkey." At the time, Cosell was praising Garrett—but Alvin happens to be black, and some people took it the wrong way.

Was MNF undergoing a mid-life crisis? A dedicated viewer since the show's inception, I tuned in at midseason for my hardest look since the pre-Lou Grant era—and was both astonished and surprised. Not only is the show a visual feast, it is both informative and enormously entertaining, though not necessarily in equal proportions on the same night. What follows is an examination of the telecast's elements, taken one by one.

THE PRODUCTION

No crisis here. Rather, a vigorous maturity. Oh, it's still disco football—they throw everything at you at a dizzying pace and assume you can keep up with it. The camera work is uniformly excellent, with lots of revealing tight shots. Note especially the felicitous choices director Chet Forte makes between plays. In the Sept. 12 Kansas City Chiefs-San Diego Chargers game, the Chargers had the ball on fourth down near the Chiefs' goal line. Cut to Chargers coach Don Coryell on the sideline for some lip reading. "How much?" he queried his players, then declared, "Go for it!" At that point, the viewer was in the ball game. (The Chargers, by the way, didn't make their first down.)

When it comes to replays, there is, as Howard would say, a veritable plethora (Dandy would tell you that means there's a whole bunch of 'em)—end-zone, ground-level, reverse-angle, what have you. The reverse-angle is a bit over-hyped—after all, it's simply another camera on the other side of the field—but effective nonetheless. For aficionados, there's the three-camera replay that shows, simultaneously, a quarterback like the Redskins' Joe Theismann and the patterns of his two primary receivers—say, Art Monk and Charlie Brown. Great stuff!

The purist and the occasional fan might diverge on MNF's use of statistical graphics. There's a veritable plethora here, too—maybe an over-plethora. MNF has advanced the art of the visual aid by employing spiffy color-coded charts and graphs that compare first downs, rushing yardage and the like. Nothing not to applaud. But the semi-interested fan probably yawns at graphics like: "Average Field Position at Start of Drive (1983)."

One statistic you have to keep track of yourself is: Number of Shots of Cheerleaders. The totals dazzle: for instance, I counted 16 shots of the Dallas Cowboys cheerleaders during the Oct. 23 Cowboys-L.A. Raiders contest. Cheerleader shots (especially those that work their way up from the tippy-toes to the tippy- er,top) are an ingrained part of MNF. Ditto the fans in the funny hats. And the fans sporting monster masks. And the banners, all of which are analyzed as lovingly as any post pattern. ("Just Married. We interrupt this honeymoon for ABC's NFL Monday Night Football," declared one sign in Green Bay. "That marriage is certainly gonna work," commented Dandy Don.) Whether you like this kind of shtick or loathe it, you must admit that the sight of a Dallas Cowboys cheerleader shimmying in the Texas moonlight is one of the great byproducts of the Industrial Age.

THE ANNOUNCERS

Graded purely on ability to describe a football game, the MNF on-air personnel come out a tad below the top teams at the other two networks: Dick Enberg/Merlin Olsen at NBC and Pat Summerall/John Madden at CBS. The MNF team is not as incisive, as well paced or as visibly prepared as its classiest NBC and CBS rivals. But it is at least as good as any of the remaining pro-football announcing teams, and the obloquy directed at Cosell and Co. has been grossly unfair.

To grade the MNF team on entertainment value, you must differentiate between Howard Nights and Non-How- → ard Nights. Cosell missed three games earlier this season, and there's talk that he'll scale back his MNF appearances in 1984. If that's so, the show will begin to lose its crucial sense of the absurd. When the game is scintillating, Howard is superfluous. But then there are stinkers like the Oct. 24 St. Louis Cardinals-New York Giants Losers Bowl. That night, the humble one was sorely missed.

For Howard is Moe to the other two's Curly and Larry; he's MNF's Alexis Carrington, its J.R. Ewing. He's its instigator. "Would you go for it . . . Giff?" he'll ask in a fourth-and-inches situation. Or: "I haven't seen Fouts throw long today. You think he's got a bad arm?"

Howard also confers the Cosell Seal of Approval (or Disapproval) on all that passes before us. That includes the utterances of his booth mates; if Cosell thinks an observation has been appropriately salient, he'll punctuate it with: "Exactly." (Sometimes: "My point exactly.") In the Chargers-Chiefs game, Cosell pontificated on, among other things, a town ("[Kansas City] is alive again! And what a great city it is!"); coaches ("I tell you, young Mackovic is gonna make it big!"); players ("He's [Kellen Winslow] All-World"); and, finally, the contest itself ("This has become a hugely interesting football game").

Cosell's finest hour is when he ad-libs the half-time highlights. After all, where else on TV can you hear veteran Raiders receiver Cliff Branch referred to as "the everlasting speedster"?

While Howard (or Dandy, or O.J.) burbles on, Frank Gifford is manfully reminding us that, yes, there is a football game being played. Gifford is a solid but not a classic play-by-play man. His voice is thin, it verges on the monotonic; he rambles breathily, he doesn't know how to use pauses for dramatic effect the way, say, Enberg does. But the man knows his football and often is the one in the booth who best communicates the game's strategic dilemmas. Moreover, Giff comes up with some nice phrases: massive offensive tackles are likened to "housing projects," and when Cowboys defensive end Ed "Too Tall" Jones, a failed pugilist, intercepted a pass and headed upfield, Giff snorted: "He runs like he boxes."

Dandy Don, too, can unfurl a nice line. "The coaches had a meeting . . . and decided that the first team to 50 wins," he quipped as the Green Bay Packers and the Redskins lit up the board for a MNF record 95 points. " 'He who hesitates is lost.' [That] was written about a fullback," he said when John Riggins was dumped after a meager gain. Alas, ol' Don often comes up short in the analysis department. During the Packers-Redskins game, with both teams' offenses executing brilliantly, Meredith made too many comments of the "That-Was-a-Well-Thrown-Ball" variety. In truth, Danderoo often appears woefully unprepared.

No such quibbles, surprisingly, about Simpson. When he signed on last summer, some critics thought the Juice would be too aloof. Instead, he consistently tells it like it is. "That ball should have been caught" is a favorite refrain. Sometimes, though, O.J. seems to have a predetermined game plan to be aggressive. "James Lofton . . . one of the great receivers . . . it appeared . . . he could have got his hands on that ball," said O.J. while viewing a replay—a replay that (as he admitted) proved him wrong.

O.J. is at his best when talking about what he used to do—running with the ball. Here, the Juice comes across as an earnest graduate student. His enthusiasm mitigates the occasional slipshod diction and grammar. Overall, O.J.'s had a fine rookie year. Besides, you've got to like a guy who tells Cosell on the air: "Howard, you have a firm grasp of the obvious."

Three-camera replays . . . color-coded graphs . . . cheerleaders galore . . . veteran role players and a rookie with slash-and-dash—well, others can knock MNF, or listen to the radio, but not I. "We do have a good time!" proclaimed Howard exultantly one night. That we do, fellas, that we do. (END)

ARE AMERICAN BRANDY DRINKERS GETTING FRIVOLOUS?

It wasn't some fancy bottle that sold more of The Christian Brothers than any other brandy in America over the last forty years. Christian Brothers never had one. Still, this time every year something funny happens. We put The Christian Brothers in a fancy gift box. And American brandy drinkers buy even more of it.

Just being frivolous? Or maybe in a burst of good will, American brandy drinkers are using the season to enlighten their friends. Letting the gift box introduce a taste so silken smooth it needs no fancy wrapping the rest of the year.

You wouldn't call that frivolous.

Just remarkably generous.

THEY CALL ABOUT CRAZED GUNMEN— AND PREPPY SNOWMEN

Here's how local newscasts get hot scoops and comic relief from alert tipsters

By David Tuller

Early last May, Robert Wickes, a substitute teacher's aide at Brentwood East Junior High School in Brentwood, N.Y., lost his job after picking a fight with a ninth-grader in one of his classes. One week later the 24-year-old with a history of psychiatric treatment, decked out in Army fatigues and flourishing a .22 caliber rifle, stalked back into the school. After shooting the principal and the boy he'd scuffled with—both of whom escaped permanent injury—he barricaded himself in a second-story classroom, taking a score of students as hostages. Brentwood, a small working-class community, kept a tense vigil throughout the day. By 10:45 P.M. Wickes had released all but one of the students; he then casually turned his weapon on himself and pumped a bullet into his brain.

By the end of the 10-hour ordeal, reporters were swarming about the normally quiet Long Island town, scrambling for information. But most found themselves playing catch-up to WCBS-TV; the crew from the CBS-owned New York City station had been the first news operation to hit the scene, arriving shortly after the incident began. The credit for the coup, says newsroom assignment manager Steve Paulus, belongs to the Brentwood resident who alerted the station as soon as he realized something terrible was happening at the school.

"His phone call gave us a real jump on the story," says Paulus. "We were there well over an hour before the wire services picked it up."

WCBS's experience is not unusual. According to news directors and assignment editors at stations all around the country, tips from viewers can lead to some of the hottest scoops on the air. Last spring, for example, the most destructive California earthquake since 1971—a 6.1 to 6.5 on the Richter scale of seismic activity—shook the Coast. On the basis of viewer calls describing the intensity of the tremors, reporters from San Francisco station KGO-TV were able to pinpoint →

Coalinga as the center of the quake. And when an inmate at a Minnesota minimum-security correctional facility suspected PCB leaks at the prison, he contacted KSTP-TV in Minneapolis, which promptly investigated the story.

"On many major breaking stories, we get calls from the public before the situation is confirmed by the authorities," points out Ken Schreiner, assignment editor at Denver's KBTV. "Earlier this year, for example, because of all the rain, there was a huge mudslide that forced the closing of Interstate 70. It was the drivers in the vicinity who informed us first."

Both WCBS and KBTV actively solicit viewer input by promoting special hot-line telephone numbers during their news broadcasts. So does Miami's WPLG, which last Feb. 15 was the first local station to go on the air with a skyborne thriller of a story. An Eastern Airlines jet en route from West Palm Beach to New York was rerouted to Miami when the landing gear malfunctioned. By the time the pilot successfully executed a dramatic wheels-up "belly-landing," the WPLG crew had been waiting on standby for an hour.

"Our information came from people who monitor emergency radio frequencies," explains assignment editor Tom Sweeney. "We always try to verify these reports, so we called the FAA [Federal Aviation Administration] tower. Usually they have time to talk. This time they cut us off, so we knew it was a serious situation."

But the use of news hot lines is not a universally accepted practice; indeed, news honchos at many stations are wary of the idea. Joanne Liebeler, assignment editor at KSTP in Minneapolis-St. Paul, warns that promoting a number on the air is asking for trouble. "You make yourself too accessible to pranksters and wackos," she stresses. John Kells, assignment editor at Houston's KTRK-TV, adds that a highly publicized number is primarily a PR gimmick. "Anyone with a good tip will call in anyway."

Steve Paulus, however, disagrees. The WCBS hot line, he points out, is a toll-free number that encourages viewers outside the immediate vicinity to dial the station. "Those are stories we might not ordinarily hear about till much later," he says.

Viewer tips, adds Jan Richards, assignment manager at WTTG in Washington, D.C., are valuable sources of human-interest features. Thanks to a tip last winter, her station was able to tape a snowman right out of "The Official Preppy Handbook." "He wore a little scarf, a navy-blue and green alligator shirt, running shoes—just right," she recalls.

Hot line or no, most stations receive a fair share of calls, even though callers cannot expect payment for their information. Indeed, these tips often serve as much needed comic relief. Though the phone may ring up to several hundred times a day, an informal poll of stations reveals that only 10 to 20 per cent of these calls pan out to be newsworthy stories. For example, Paulus says he gets many a buzz from people who want to make sure he knows that the New York Islanders have just won the Stanley Cup. Other stations report a heavy flow of prank calls, particularly during school vacations. Then there are the regulars—like the man who buzzed KTRK day after day claiming that he'd discovered yet another corpse in the Houston area.

Sometimes, judging the validity of a tip can be difficult. News editors have to learn to sniff the truth behind the tale. Explains Kells, "I'm more inclined to believe a trucker who says he dumped three loads of toxic chemicals on these dates at these sites than one who asserts he did it thousands of times all over the state. The more detailed and factual, the more believable it is."

And the more fantastic, the less so. Kells recently heard from a man who threatened to blow up the White House unless authorities complied with his demand to get him a date with Brooke Shields. "He then insisted he was the one true God, that the world would end in 45 minutes if he didn't get what he wanted. When he told us time had run out, I wanted to get his reaction to the fact that we were still here—but he hung up." (END)

THE EVENING NEWS

There are three network evening news programs, and they are three good ones. If you like one better than the others, it's probably a matter of your taste for that show's style, philosophy, approach. Now that the "single anchor concept" is back in vogue, it's noticeable that the three shows reflect the styles of their anchormen. This is only partly because the anchor sets the tone of a show. It's also because the news department tends to hire an anchorman who reflects its philosophy of news.

The CBS approach is hard news with a capital H, and Dan Rather's steel-trap delivery fits the hard approach perfectly. NBC favors lightening the hard news with softer features and sidebar stories, and Tom Brokaw's lighter personality and touch of wryness complement this approach. ABC's news has changed in the past three years—from razzle-dazzle with electronic effects and multiple anchors to a smoother, more ruminative approach personified by its anchor, Peter Jennings.

The best way to compare the shows is on a slow news day, when there are no overwhelming events to make news decisions automatic. Nothing much happened on Wednesday, Nov. 2—a few mopping-up operations on Grenada, an official announcement of Martin Luther King Day, a threat of a Greyhound strike.

NBC, typically, filled its half hour with features. There was a story on how the Marines in Lebanon get their mail and an amusing piece on George Burns' 5-year contract with a Vegas nightclub. Brokaw quoted Burns: "I can't afford to die when I'm booked." Robert Bazell reported on the recall of a batch of plasma from a man who had died of AIDS, and took a few seconds to state clearly: "AIDS can be transmitted only by sexual contact or by blood."

CBS, true to form, managed to find a half hour of hard news, even if it meant going to mainland China for the execution of some Chinese criminals rounded up during a government crackdown on crime. "CBS News has learned Donald Rumsfeld will be named U.S. Envoy to the Mideast," said Rather with a touch of satisfaction. "CBS News has learned" means the other guys don't have the story yet.

ABC knows it has something in Peter Jennings' polished authority and makes more use of him. On that day, for instance, Jennings read the Greyhound story and was the voice for tape of a requiem in France for French soldiers killed in Lebanon. There was a thoroughgoing feature on Jesse Jackson's Presidential candidacy.

My favorite anchor of the moment is Jennings, with his crisp but low-keyed approach. I remember when he was the pretty, young anchor from 1965-67 of Peter Jennings with the News, a low-rated show that, I'm afraid, reflected a lack of seasoning in its anchorman. To his credit, it was Jennings himself who suggested he leave the anchor spot and go learn his trade as a correspondent. Now there are well-earned lines in that handsome face and a hairline that threatens to recede, and a credibility that comes with years of excellent fieldwork. There is a certain reserve in Jennings' delivery. He is conversational but not folksy, and he may even bring correct pronunciation back into style. (END)
